Historical & cultural sites and visits

The Swedish Bell Tower of Gustavia

Bell tower erected in the late 18th century, around 1790, in volcanic stone, during the Swedish occupation of the island (1785-1877). The church never survived. The cast-iron bell was cast in Stockholm in 1799. During this period, the belfry rang out to announce all the island's important events.

L'Eglise Notre-Dame-de-l'Assomption de Gustavia

Church built between 1822 and 1829, during the Swedish occupation of the island (1785-1877), repaired after the cyclone of 1837. A religious building in a distinctive Hispanic style. The current shape and layout of the bell tower date from 1884 (after the retrocession).

Maison Dinzey Le Brigantin

This wooden house was prefabricated and erected for the Dinzey family in 1830. And the only one of a dozen similar houses to have withstood fire and cyclones over the years. What's interesting about this house is that it's one of the few buildings in Gustavia without a stone first floor.

Lorient Church

A religious building built around 1850 in the small village of Lorient, a rare witness to the island's Swedish period (1785-1877). The bell was cast in Nantes in 1860. The bell tower, located near the sea, served as a landmark for sailors.

Fort Karl

Fort Karl was one of the three forts that framed Gustavia in Swedish times, along with Forts Gustav and Octav. It stands on a small hill 29m high. It overlooks Shell Beach and offers a fine view of Gustavia, thanks to the installation of an observation platform by the Nature Reserve.
